What contributed to performance?

Stocks in the United States significantly contributed to the Fund’s return during the reporting period. The information technology sector was the largest contributor to performance, particularly semiconductor stocks. These companies gained amid continued demand for artificial intelligence (“AI”), data center expansions, and continued innovation in chips and network solutions. Systems software firms benefited from robust demand in cloud-delivered businesses, including cybersecurity, and increasing adoption of AI technologies. Communication firms, particularly those in the interactive media and services segment, were supported by solid digital advertising revenue growth fueled by AI investments that improved ad targeting and performance. Japanese equities were supported by sustained corporate governance reforms and renewed confidence among both domestic and foreign investors.

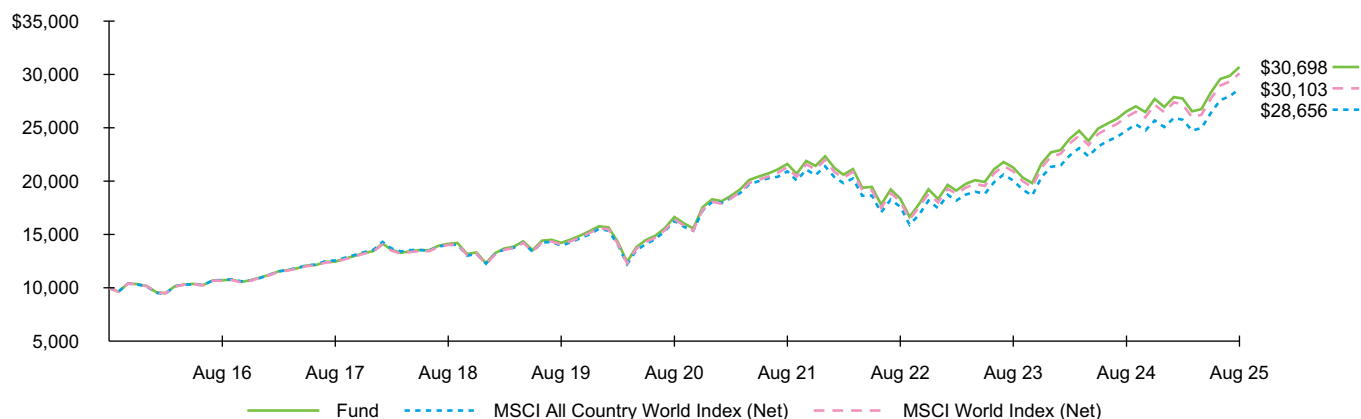

What detracted from performance?

U.S. healthcare stocks were modest detractors from the Fund’s return during the reporting period, pressured by increasing regulatory scrutiny and policy upheaval.
