An index is designed to represent and measure the performance of a specific market, asset class, sector, or investment strategy. The S&P 500 Index, for example, tracks 500 of the largest U.S. stocks by market capitalization.

Unlike individual securities, market indexes aren't directly investable. Instead, most investors use index funds, which are designed to track the performance of designated indexes, less fees.

The role of an index

Indexes are used in both index and active investing.

- Index investing: This includes mutual funds and exchange traded funds (ETFs) that seek to track the performance of a specified index. These “index” funds provide simple, low-cost ways to gain exposure to the market.
- Active investing: Indexes are typically used to measure performance of active funds. Alpha-seeking managers attempt to “beat the market” by outperforming their benchmark—which is usually an index.

Indexes come in all shapes and sizes

Indexing began in equities but has grown to encompass much more. There are millions of indexes spanning all major asset classes, including fixed income, currencies, commodities and real estate (Figure 1).

Indexes can be broad—like the Russell 2000, which focuses on small-cap U.S. equities—or track narrower segments of the market, including single countries, specific sectors (e.g., technology), or themes (e.g., clean energy).

Equity	Fixed Income	Currency	Commodity	Real Estate
Dow Jones U.S. Health Care Index	ICE U.S. Treasury 7-10 Year Bond Index	ICE U.S. Dollar Index	S&P GSCI Crude Oil Index	Dow Jones U.S. Real Estate Index
MSCI USA ESG Leaders Index	Bloomberg Barclays US Corporate High Yield Total Return Index	Bloomberg Euro Index	Bloomberg Precious Metals Subindex	Fundamental Income Net Lease Real Estate Index

The above table is for illustration purposes only. It serves as a general overview and is not exhaustive.

Index providers create and maintain indexes

Index providers, like MSCI and S&P Dow Jones Indices, are responsible for constructing and monitoring a wide variety of indexes.

Each provider uses a unique, rules-based methodology to build their indexes. This methodology is used to define the scope of the index, such as which securities or financial instruments are included and their respective weightings.

Index providers monitor not just the market but also regulatory and corporate events for ongoing index maintenance. For example, providers may need to rebalance the index—or adjust the weighting of constituent securities—based on corporate actions (e.g., stock splits) or changing market conditions.

The composition of indexes changes frequently

During periodic reviews, index providers may make changes to their indexes. For example, a provider will remove securities that no longer meet the criteria for index inclusion as outlined in its construction methodology.

Alternatively, an index provider may add a security if it becomes eligible for inclusion (e.g., if a private company takes its shares public).

Index providers also contend with macroeconomic events, like geopolitical tensions that result in country-wide or firm-specific sanctions, and adjust their indexes accordingly.

Fund managers manage funds, not indexes

Index providers license their indexes to asset managers and other financial institutions for a variety of uses, including benchmarking investments.

Index fund managers outline their investment objectives and determine which index benchmarks will best align with those objectives—and, ultimately, the needs of investors.

Managers of index mutual funds and ETFs strive to track the performance of a fund's underlying index as closely as possible. This can be achieved in two ways:

- Full replication. A fund may exactly match the composition of the index by holding every security at the same weight as the index.
- Owning a subset of the index. In some instances, such as funds that transact in less liquid fixed income markets, it may be difficult or impossible to purchase every index component. (In fact, some bond indexes have thousands of securities.) Instead, portfolio managers may seek to deliver index-like risk and return characteristics by holding and managing a representative sample of index securities (Figure 3).

There's nothing 'passive' about index fund management

Some people think that index funds are managed by computers. In reality, a lot of work gets done behind the scenes by skilled portfolio managers.

For example, during index rebalances and reconstitutions—reweighting and deleting or adding securities, respectively—index fund managers must rebalance or reconstitute their portfolios accordingly.

While indexes assume an immediate, frictionless, and costless implementation of changes, index fund managers are faced with transaction costs, risks, and other frictions when they execute trades in their portfolios.

At the same time, when trading around index events, index fund managers have control and exercise discretion in seeking to track the index and maximize shareholder value.

This means that index fund managers must review information about upcoming index changes and have an implementation plan in place to buy or sell securities to align their portfolio with the index in a way that balances risk, return, and cost.

Other responsibilities may include tracking corporate actions that can impact the composition of an index, reinvesting dividend or interest payments received from a fund's portfolio holdings, and monitoring risk in their portfolios and in the market.

In instances where a portfolio holds a sample of an index's securities, portfolio managers have discretion over security selection and can choose which securities to add or remove from the portfolio in order to continue tracking the index while aiming to minimize transaction costs and taxes.

Two distinct roles of equal importance

While index providers and index fund managers play different roles, they are equally important to the index investing landscape.

Index funds provide a way for investors to build diversified portfolios in a cost-efficient manner. This would not be possible without the efforts of index providers to build and maintain the index methodologies that underlie these funds.

As index investing continues to grow, it will be important for investors to understand the crucial, yet distinct, roles that these market participants play.

ETFs and mutual funds: Know the differences

- Strategy: Fund management styles are typically categorised as “active” or “index”. Active funds (most mutual funds) seek to outperform market indexes, while “index” funds (some mutual funds and most ETFs) seek to match the fund’s performance to an established market index, such as the S&P 500.
- Trading: Mutual funds are bought and sold directly from the mutual fund company at the current day’s closing price, or the Net Asset Value (NAV). ETFs are traded throughout the day at the current market price, like a stock, and may cost slightly more or less than NAV. Mutual fund transactions do not include commissions to a brokerage, while some ETF transactions do.
- Transaction fees: For mutual funds, transaction fees may include sales charges (sales loads) or redemption fees. These are paid directly by investors. ETF transactions may include brokerage commissions (like stocks), which are paid directly by investors.
- Tax implications: Mutual fund shareholders redeem shares directly from the fund, so the fund manager must often sell fund securities to honour redemptions, potentially triggering capital gains for the fund’s remaining shareholders. Because ETF investors buy and sell shares with other investors on an exchange, the ETF manager doesn’t have to sell holdings – potentially creating capital gains – to meet investor redemptions. ETF shareholders can incur tax consequences when they sell shares on the exchange, but that tax consequence is not passed on to other ETF shareholders.
- Transparency: ETFs generally disclose holdings daily. Mutual funds generally disclose holdings quarterly.

* Due to fund structure, mutual fund holders may be subject to taxable capital gains distributions due to other investors’ redemptions directly to the mutual fund. Taxable capital gain distributions can occur to ETF investors based on stocks trading within the fund as the ETF creates and redeems shares and rebalances its holdings. ETFs and stocks will also distribute taxable capital gains when an investor sells their own shares. Certain traditional mutual funds can also be tax efficient.

Risks

Capital at risk. The value of investments and the income from them can fall as well as rise and are not guaranteed. Investors may not get back the amount originally invested.

Past performance is not a reliable indicator of current or future results and should not be the sole factor of consideration when selecting a product or strategy.

Changes in the rates of exchange between currencies may cause the value of investments to diminish or increase. Fluctuation may be particularly marked in the case of a higher volatility fund and the value of an investment may fall suddenly and substantially. Levels and basis of taxation may change from time to time.

All figures are denominated in U.S. dollars, unless otherwise noted.

Important Information about iShares ETFs

For U.S. investors: Carefully consider the Funds' investment objectives, risk factors, and charges and expenses before investing. This and other information can be found in the Funds' prospectuses or, if available, the summary prospectuses which may be obtained by visiting www.iShares.com or www.blackrock.com. Read the prospectus carefully before investing.

Investing involves risk, including possible loss of principal.

Shares of iShares ETFs may be bought and sold throughout the day on the exchange through any brokerage account. Shares are not individually redeemable from the ETF, however, shares may be redeemed directly from an ETF by Authorized Participants, in very large creation/redemption units. There can be no assurance that an active trading market for shares of an ETF will develop or be maintained. Diversification and asset allocation may not protect against market risk or loss of principal.

Transactions in shares of ETFs may result in brokerage commissions and will generate tax consequences. All regulated investment companies are obliged to distribute portfolio gains to shareholders. When comparing stocks or bonds and ETFs, it should be remembered that management fees associated with fund investments are not borne by investors in individual stocks or bonds.
